THE SAMOAN ISLANDS

THE SAMOAN ISLANDS .- BY THE MARQUE OF TEANO. PART III. Caste is estocmed a fundamental basis of society, but with gradations in family, Lored-stary and gaining in pride and power, with each succeeding generation. To a stranger there are no outward evidence of caste except in stature and physical beauty. The house and household appointments of the common way. Her surface is a sterile, rocky mass. The atmosphere has gone, or nearly so, and the seas are dried up. The same process is can differ but little from those of the chiefs, going on with our earth, and a similar result There is a reverence felt for and attached to will eventually ensue, but by reason of the title greatest family names, and the poorest greater bulk of our planet, effects produced in man in Samoa knows the hereditary pres-tige of such a name. Formerly there were 000,000 with us. kings of districts with the generic appellation "Tui," as "Tui Atua," "Tui Manua," "Tui though great family names, withou position or governing power, were and still are held in great reverence. Of such are "Mali-etos," and the female branch of the family "Toos," the names of which are associated with the history and traditions of Samoa. The island of Tutuin has but one great name or family "Leatsu," though it has a number of petty chiefs, the island being tributary to the district of "Atus," in Upolu, where the family is powerful,

The Samoan is especially polite. In mee the Samoan is especially pointe. In meetings and councils much is consumed in acts of courteey and in the interchange of compliments. When a chief or a distinguished stranger goes through a village all noises coase. Traveling parties (Malanga) are hospitably received and entertained. In their general intercoase, violence or even rudeness is unknown. Women ar equals of men except in government. The father carries the child as well as the mother, and joins in the preparation of food and is ooking. Labor is generally divided between carries a burden or paddles a boat only from choice, and her hardest labor is the munufac ture of native cloth ("Tapa"). In time war women are emissaries, going from fort t far unmolested. Her person is always sacred as also are children. A chief's daughter is of ten the maid of the village. She is rever-enced by her people, though not governing them and occupies a most prominent position Poligamy is common on the part of men, neve in the part of women though two wives solder ive in the same house. A plurality of wive s common, a busband usually sending a wife r people when he takes to himself a new me. Virtue in Samoa is predominant. It is creed more powerful than caste, and was re-igiously observed before the introduction of nity. In the higher castes it seld more sausedly than among the lower. in their night-dances that the Same nds. Often they are laservious exhibition

The primitive dress of the people consist f a girdle of ti-leaves, now replaced by conon gloth and native "Sixpe," though on fes-ive occasions the women dress in long train of "Siaro" with bodiess of fine mats. The hair disposition to assume the dress of the whitea growing, and in their effects to don the neone many laughable scenes are presented consider, and this consists of army and navy uniforms, which certain chiefs have acquired from foreign wassels, and which they are proud not mark distinction among the people, as with the Maoris in New Zealand; the design is identical with all persons. The face is never marked. Women do not tattoo. The process is long and very painful; the subject is ofter compelled to have long intervals of rest. The estruments are rows of needles, fastened upo a stick about six inches in length, which is held lightly by the operator and beaten with a small hammer. The pigment, or coloring matter is lampblack, from the caudie-nut, which gives a blue-black color, the marking extends from a point on each side of the knee upward to the "umbilic." This part of the body is marked without a broak, the lumbar vertebra is not marked. Two lines complete the pro-cess, and the operator must receive his pay before the last one is completed.

In war the Samoan is patient, carpest and asily controlled by his leaders. While cruel o their enamies, they are never treacherous; mants and truces are religiously adhered o; neutral ground is sacred; prisoners are never taken; the importance of a victory is measured by the number of heads taken. The head is publicly exposed and reviled, but never nutilated. At the proper time, the womer which, with the heads, are rolled in white cloth and borns away for burial. Like the Mapri, of New Zenland, the Samoan digs ditches, throws up earthworks, with facines and parapets, builds forts and palisades, and onstructs large, double war canoes (alia) capable of carrying two bundred warrors. When a fort on the beach is to be assaulted, the canees with heavy barricades built on them, are red up abreast the fort, by the men, who take to the water on coming to close quarters, upon the opposite wide of the craft, for shelte and where they remains waiting the proper mo-ment far attack. The national courtesy of the people and the general family relationship exing between them do much to ameliorate the rrors of their civil strives. At night, or under a flag of truce, enomies will meet and ex-change powder and lead, or food, with perfect unnecence, telling each other that they are are wanting such things for the morrow's work. The natives' weapons are spears, clubs, knives and slings; though they have begun recently to adopt frearms, in the last war usrecently to adopt froatms, in the sast war te-sing cannon, muskets, pistols, and now pos-cessing some improved breech-loading rifles. Though wars among the Samoans themselves have been very herce and destructive, yet one odred disciplined white soldiers would easily preserve peace among them.

The industries of the people are confined to the building of houses, stone fences, cances ulfivation of yam and tare, munufacturing attention and fine mats fishing and collect g food. Houses are generally built of the orrounds the central pillar which supports ork of the roof is built, consisting of light strike nicely spliced making a succession of oricles. These circles are again crossed at right angles by other sticks and the whole is west together with sonnel, the roof making a mictrole of inverted bowl, covered with a latch of sugar cane leaves, and h, the space careen the onter circles of posts are left which are raised and lowered at pleasure of the occupant. The floor in slightly raise above the ground, covered with pebbles, upo and atome fire-place, though but little used, easilying is done in overse or houses built r the nurpose. The houses are neat and san, and are kept in good order. Large enting acround divide the members of the ily at mget. To every village there is a

The collection and preparation of copra is the chief industry and it is the only article of export, excepting a very little oil, cotton and fungus. Each family has its cocca-mut grave of trees. The nut is allowed to ripen, when it is husked, broken and the meat or fruit taken from the shell. This is cut into slices, dried and sacked for barter and export. This trade has already attained great proportions.
